

Wayne Out There (.com)

wayne-out-there

Stuff that matters to Wayne

Google: The Supreme Alphabet Agency

Posted on October 25, 2015 by admin

You may have not read my original post about Google's somewhat silent and out-of-the-blue creation of their new 'supreme corporation' 'Alphabet, but if not, do catch up by reading it here. I knew there was 'something' about their name. Something strategic. Something creepy. Something tongue and cheek. But it wasn't until I had a 6am coffee with Joe Adam on Saturday that it came to light. Joe wasn't aware of 'Alphabet' the corporation. So as soon as I explained what they were doing, he laughed and said this: "It's funny how secret societies and governments always leave a kind of mocking fingerprint - a kind of 'gotcha!' when they operate. Google is not hiding that they are an alphabet agency." Well, I didn't know what an alphabet agency was until he had pointed it out and sure enough he's right. Alphabet is the supreme alphabet agency, in bed with all forms of government, if not the USA government themselves. Creeeeeeeeeeepy. But you've been warned to un-google. Don't you dare say I didn't warn you. Even Alex Jones has warned you for crying out loud! The solution is Ubuntu. Change now or severely regret it.

Posted in: Freedom And Privacy, Technology, Ubuntu | Tagged: Google, Government, Privacy, Ubuntu | With 0 comments